I always felt sorry for people in wheelchairs. Some people, old and weak, cannot _____21_____ by themselves. Others seem perfectly healthy, _____22_____ in business suits, and wheel themselves around with strong determination. But whenever I saw someone in a wheelchair, I only saw a _____23_____, not a person.

Then I fainted(晕倒) at Euro Disney _____24_____ low blood pressure. This was the first time I had ever fainted, and my parents said that I must _____25_____ for a while after First Aid. I agreed to take it easy, but _____26_____ I stepped toward the door, I saw my dad pushing a(n) _____27_____ in my direction! Feeling the colour burn my cheeks, I asked him to wheel that thing right back to _____28_____ he found it.

I could not believe this was happening to me. Wheelchairs were _____29_____ for other people but not for me. As my father wheeled me out into the main street, people _____30_____ began to treat me differently.

Little kids ran in front of me, _____31_____ my father to stop the wheelchair suddenly. _____32_____ set in as I was thrown back and forth. "Stupid kids! They have perfectly good _____33_____. Why can't they watch where they're going?" I thought. People _____34_____ down at me, pity in their eyes. Then they would look away, maybe because they thought the _____35_____ they forgot me, the better.

"I am just like you!" I wanted to scream. "The only _____36_____ is that you've got legs, and I have wheels."

People in wheelchairs are not _____37_____. They can see every look and hear each word. Looking out at the faces, I finally understood: I was once just like them. I _____38_____ people in wheelchairs exactly the way they did not _____39_____ to be treated. I realized it is some of us with two healthy legs who are _____40_____ disabled.
