书面表达

One possible version:

In the future, man's life will be very different from that of today. First, with the development of medicine, on the average, a person will live to the age of about 120. Second, because of the discovery and use of new energy, the environmental pollution will be under control. Third, people's daily life will change greatly, too. For example, robots will do all your housework for you; your chair will change its color to match what you're wearing; you can also contact others using your wrist watch and you can see each other while speaking; you can even take a spaceship into space for your holidays.

In a word, man's life will be much better beyond imagination.
